1. Technical Field The present disclosure relates generally to surgical instruments and, more specifically, to a surgical instrument and method of use for fastening a suture in tissue. 2. Background of Related Art Many different types of surgical instruments used to treat tissue are generally known, including for example, electrosurgical forceps, hemostats, bipolar cauterizers, and coagulators. An electrosurgical forceps is a common instrument used in open and endoscopic surgical procedures to coagulate, cauterize and/or seal tissue. Typically, a conventional forceps is in the form of a pair of scissors-like jaws that clamp down on tissue. Various types of scissoring action, e.g., adding or removing energy to the tissue, are known. Typically, in addition to cutting and cauterizing tissue, a forceps can also apply coagulation, in order to effectively seal tissue. Usually, the pair of scissors-like jaws of a conventional forceps have one of the jaws forming one of the cutting surfaces, and the other jaw forming a counter-surfacing surface to the one cutting surface. Recently, powered surgical instruments for sealing tissue have become available. For example, powered hemostats typically include a motor configured to move a pair of seal plates against one or more electrodes to effect hemostasis, i.e., to cause blood to coagulate. An example of such a powered surgical instrument is the ENDOPATH™ laser hemostasis system available from Ethicon Endo-Surgery, Inc., of Cincinnati, Ohio. Some conventional surgical instruments include clamping jaw or hinge features that permit the jaws or shearing members of the surgical instrument to be opened and closed for working tissue. Other conventional surgical instruments, known as clamping, shearing, and combination instruments, often include jaws that may be independently moved by a drive assembly. Furthermore, a suture is generally a filament made of surgical material (e.g., a silk, cotton, or nylon), used to tie or secure body tissue or organs together. One or more surgical needles may be attached to one end of the suture while a suture needle holder or tag is attached to the other end of the suture. In many surgical procedures, e.g., hernia repair, a surgical instrument is used to stitch or secure the tissue, such as the hernia patch, to the tissue using the suture. Some surgical instruments used to stitch tissue include a pair of jaws

I bought the new tool from Amazon. "The Design-a-Grill, CSA-27 in Chrome ($33.00 CDN). I noticed the grill wasn't wide enough to fit a portable gas grill. So this would give you a design sheet to go to the dealer for the chrome version, plus the grilling possibilities would be endless. Or, you could use the basic stainless steel version to save $10.00 Cdn. Two things I didn't mention was the tire deflation kit and the towing handle. CATOD.Thanks for the info. I had the stainless steel version but no grill. I'm going to order the chrome version and look into the chrome grill. I also will be adding a ToFlite kit and then an aftermarket towing handle but I have to wait to order those. I am going to send a wittle more detailed email to the gal at Amazon. I want her to know what I want and am looking for. I was planning on getting the stainless steel version because it is pre-painted and has a detachable grill but now it looks like the chrome version will do better for the exact same price. I have the chrome version and can really like or dislike the grill for the application. The small hole in the grill is for fixing it to the grill. I will send my feedback to Amazon. I would probably go with the chromed one just to be safe. I have the chrome version and can really like or dislike the grill for the application.
