Signals and processes that control the capacity of human bone marrow fibroblasts to support the differentiation of haematopoietic progenitor cells in vitro. Fibroblasts were prepared from aspirates of haematopoietic bone marrow by treatment with collagenase-DCL or trypsin-EDTA. The capacity of these cells to support the differentiation of human progenitor cells was investigated in short-term cultures. As defined by the relationship between number of input cells and percentage of CFU-GM in the culture system, there was a significant increase in the number of CFU-GM produced by cultures of bone marrow aspirate containing high concentrations of fibroblasts. In cultures in which the ratio of input to output cells was varied, a positive correlation was observed between the concentration of bone marrow aspirate and the percentage of CFU-GM generated. To investigate the mechanisms underlying these observations, co-cultures of fibroblasts and CFU-GM were established. If the input/output cell ratio was 1:1, haematopoietic progenitor cells were not supported by the fibroblasts. If a three-fold excess of fibroblasts was added to the culture system, however, numbers of CFU-GM were increased, but their proliferation was suppressed. In contrast, if a 10-fold excess of fibroblasts was added, a maximal number of CFU-GM were generated and the proliferation of progenitor cells was increased compared with the control culture, which received a three-fold excess of fibroblasts. The addition of anti-interferon-gamma caused a progressive decrease in the numbers of CFU-GM in the presence of a 10-fold excess of fibroblasts and the increase in proliferation of progenitor cells which normally accompanies the formation of CFU-GM was suppressed. These results provide evidence that the differentiated stroma of haematopoietic bone marrow contains regulatory cells that control CFU-GM proliferation. The results also suggest that the inhibitory influence of fibrobl

Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to radiofrequency (RF) ablation of tissue, and more particularly, to electrodes that are used for ablation, for example, in an ablation catheter that is used for ablation of cardiac tissue.

2. Description of the Related Art There are a number of instances where ablation of tissue may be desirable. For example, ablation of cardiac tissue may be carried out in connection with various procedures, such as, for example, electrophysiology procedures including radiofrequency (RF) ablation, cryoablation, ultrasound ablation, laser ablation, microwave ablation, and the like. Conventional ablation catheters typically utilize a tip electrode at a distal end of a catheter that is used for ablation. However, it may be desirable to form an ablation lesion at a location that is more than about 1 cm from the distal end of the catheter (i.e., “beyond the distal end” of the catheter), and some conventional ablation catheters are limited in their ability to form lesions at locations that are beyond the distal end. Thus, there is a need for an electrode that may be used for ablation of tissue beyond the distal end of a catheter, and that can form uniform lesions, as well as provide a relatively quick and easy way to create an ablative lesion.

FusionTrees v0.6.0 is a plug-in to ModelViewer developed by Torch GmbH. It allows to render multiple displays. It differs from other 3D viewers in that it does not rely on a predefined session graph for scene traversal. Instead it simulates a
