The properties of CdS hollow-fiber gas-diffusion electrode for photocatalytic H<sub>2</sub>S removal from gas phase were tested. The photocatalytic activities of CdS hollow-fiber electrode were compared with those of the electrodes coated with solid catalysts. The results show that CdS/Hollow-fiber electrode was a novel and effective photocatalytic material. The photocatalytic activity of CdS/Hollow-fiber electrode is three times higher than that of the solid catalyst. The stabilities of the CdS hollow-fiber gas-diffusion electrode were studied in different solutions for 300h. The results show that CdS/Hollow-fiber electrode has good pH stability and excellent stability in tap water and tap water with the additions of impurities.Functional expression of luteinizing hormone-releasing hormone (LH-RH) receptors in human breast cancer cells. A receptor for luteinizing hormone-releasing hormone (LH-RH) has been detected in a number of human tumors including colorectal, ovarian and lung carcinomas, but not in normal human tissue. Recently, LH-RH receptors have been described in estrogen receptor positive (ER+) breast tumors, suggesting that LH-RH plays a role in the regulation of hormone dependent breast cancer. In this study, the presence of a functional LH-RH receptor has been demonstrated in a breast cancer cell line (MCF-7) by measuring intracellular cAMP levels in response to LH-RH stimulation. LH-RH and its agonists act as a suppressor of the proliferation of breast cancer cells, indicating the potential of these compounds as therapeutic agents in breast cancer. Occ13bf012
