Henan Henan ( / ; romanized: Heˇ'nán) is one of the five provinces of the People's Republic of China, and the second largest province by population. Henan is ranked 6th in GDP and 4th in nominal gross domestic product (GDP) in China. It also has a domestic product per capita of ¥49,000 per year, higher than that of the provinces of Zhejiang, Shandong and Jiangsu. Henan is also the home of the Great Wall of China, the Yellow River, China's largest reservoir, and its largest hydropower station, the Sanmenxia Dam. Geography and climate Henan has a total area of, of which 57% is land and 43% is water. The highest point is Mount Emei, in the province's northwest; the lowest point is the Yellow Sea, in the northeast. Henan's climate is "subtropical humid", with an annual mean temperature of. Henan's humid subtropical climate is extremely suitable for all kinds of industries and agricultural production. The largest city in Henan, Zhengzhou, has a sub-humid, monsoon climate (Köppen Cwa), similar to North India. The average annual temperature in Zhengzhou is. The coldest month of the year is December with a January mean temperature of. The hottest month of the year is July with a July mean temperature of. The frost-free period is 150 days. The annual precipitation is around, with approximately 77% of it falling from May to October. Because of its location on the lower reaches of the Yangtze River, Henan's winters are much milder than other provinces of China. History Henan is home to some of China's earliest civilization and modern-day historical sites. Erlitou, along the Yellow River, is considered one of China's first settlements. The Qin Empire was founded in the province in 221 BC; it was their capital until the capital was relocated to Luoyang in 206 BC. In ancient times the center of Chinese civilisation was identified with China's capital, Chang'an. Henan was the largest economic region of China during the Tang Dynasty (618–907), with a production of silk, paper, and tea accounting for nearly half of China's GDP. During the Qing Dynasty, Zhengzhou served as the capital of the province
