Ultrasound images suffer from speckle noise which is mainly caused by the sound waves reflected from the tissue inhomogeneities. The amount of noise present in ultrasound images varies with different experimental parameters, and therefore, it cannot be predicted in advance. Although the amount of the speckle noise in an ultrasound image can be reduced with the conventional lowpass filtering technique, it often leads to image blurring and contrast loss. In this paper, we present a method to estimate the noise present in an ultrasound image and then remove it using a
