I am looking for information in order to be able to post the private key of an S3 bucket to a web page where others can signup. From that page I will be able to download the resulting data, but I need to be able to make sure that I can trust the data I download from that server. I know that the access rules to the server can be overridden by making the rules available to the server, but it is possible to get hold of those rules? Thank you for your help. A: S3 doesn't have private keys. Your service has a private key and your service uses that private key to create signed URLs which are then used in S3. Your own server can also create signed URLs, and then use them in S3 as the origin for content. To post your URL on your website, ask your browser to create an S3 signed URL, and use that URL to post the content. A fire that destroyed the home of a well-known German politician has underscored the precariousness of the country's finances. Andreas Scheuer, an up-and-coming liberal politician, suffered heavy losses, including an estimated 100,000 euros (US$110,000) worth of his collection of paintings, sculpture and crystals. "Everything is gone," Scheuer told the Associated Press. "I feel terrible. It's so bad. But at the same time, it's funny, because it is only the beginning. The ship is not sinking, but it's certainly leaking." The collection 6d1f23a050
