The Romans quickly established control over the tribes of present day southeastern England. One British chieftain of the Catuvallauni tribe known as Caractacus, who initially fled from Camulodunum (Colchester) to present day south Wales, stirred up some resistance until his defeat and capture in 51 AD. Dispatched off to Rome, he obviously made friends in high places, appearing in Claudius' triumphal procession. He was later released in recognition of his courage and died in Rome.

Resistance to Roman rule continued in what is now Wales, particularly inspired by the Druids, the priests of the native Celtic peoples. Romans Cad V9 2d.com, seosatzbpxrk.. The Romans proved to be successful colonists in Britain, for instance 'twelve were alive at the time of their Emperor Hadrian's death (the date of Trajan's death is not definitely known). It would seem that the majority of the troops who colonised Britain came from other parts of the Empire, The Romans had seen quite a lot of success in many provinces in the East. A distinguished number of governors came from the Roman cohorts living in Britain, too, Such, for instance, was Hadrian's freedman Sextus Julius Africanus, who probably served as an envoy to Britain. The troops of Julius Africanus' cohort are mentioned in the list of cohorts for the 1st August AD 96. Julius Africanus is probably the same Africanus whom Dio Cassius calls 'the Governor' (probably in reference to the Emperor Trajan; Pliny, in his Natural History, calls him 'of the cavalry').
