The Android update adds significant new features to the app. The Live Composite option is implemented in the form of a new Studio X3 feature and lets you make your own collages with up to 10+ images. With Live Composite, artists can alter the composition, save and study the scene, come back to the same composition in time using the feature and leave a comment while they tweak the scene. This was one of the biggest and most often asked for new features into the app. The update to the iOS app highlights this feature as well. In addition to the Android version of Studio X3, the iOS version of the app now uses the collage feature as well. Artists/designers can easily create collages with up to 10+ images on their iPhone or iPad and then leave comments to the scene. This app is a great tool for collaborating with a team as a group can look at a collage and make comments or notes. The other primary Android improvement is the ability to rotate your images 90 degrees. The studio app now has a tab called "Camera" where an image can be rotated on the fly leaving the collage in its original orientation. The update to the apps also includes a new feature called "Layers Studio." This feature allows users to edit their layers, view the layers, and change the opacity of their layers all in one place. In other words, you can make your own layers without opening a separate color management application, view your layers in the context of a collage, and manage your layers in a single app.

a. Be more tech-savvy - I like Airbnb, but it is limited in the way you interact with people. For example, when a host lets you in their home or apartment, it's not really a timed interaction. You can show up at any time and get a welcome. Some hosts have guests in and out within minutes. I was totally unprepared for that. I could be "unlocked" and having guests in hours later.
