Abortion is illegal in mainland China and it is rare for women in China to seek an abortion. Hospital-based studies of abortion rates among married women show rates of abortion of 2.7-6.9 per 100 women. The results of studies of abortions performed for medical or social reasons in 1978, 1979, and 1990 showed that these rates are much higher than would be expected for women who have regular access to health care facilities. In view of the high rates of abortion in China, for women who have access to health services, the government must fully support abortion provision. However, many women are not able to access abortion services. Abortion is often a painful experience and women who are pregnant at an early stage of gestation are most at risk. China may need to modify its restrictive abortion laws. In China, local governments are the only institutions that can issue birth permit. According to the law, if a woman does not have a valid permit, she will be subject to abortion detention. If a woman wants a legal abortion, she needs her husband's permission. If this is not given, she will be subject to detention. Among Chinese unmarried women, the rate of illegal abortions is at least as high as that of married women. The government needs to expand the provision of legal abortions in China, so that every woman can give birth safely and privately. It is not necessary that a
